ISSUE #9

Connecting with the World

March 2019

We now live in a borderless age where all things transcend national boundaries. Researchers search for new insights around the world to tackle global issues.

The researchers at Ritsumeikan also apply a world-embracing perspective in their fieldwork and studies, whether domestic or abroad, considering the entire planet as their research field. Through their findings, they aim to contribute to the betterment of humankind.

In this issue, our researchers, along with scientists from around the world involved in solving advanced, universal challenges that face humanity today, will share the appeal of connecting across borders to engage with diverse cultures while advancing their studies.

Low-cost, high-efficiency, next-generation Thin-film Solar Cell to replace Silicon

Jakapan Chantana
Professor, Research Organization of Science and Technology

What would the structure of a thin-film solar cell that does not use harmful cadmium and yet achieves high photoelectric conversion efficiency look like?

Today, as the number of energy-related problems, such as environmental pollution, the exhaustion of underground resources, natural disasters, and nuclear power plant accidents increases, renewable energy is becoming increasingly more important. In particular, expectations are high for solar power, but much development must take place before it can surpass existing power generation methods. Solar cells made from silicon currently have a market share of more than 90%, but there is a limit to the reductions in manufacturing costs that can be achieved; thus, significant efforts are being devoted to develop new types of solar cells that do not require silicon.

One such new kind of solar cell is the CIS thin-film solar cell, which mainly consists of copper (Cu), indium (In), and selenium (Se), with a chalcopyrite crystalline structure.

Jakapan Chantana is engaged in the development of solar cells that use Cu, In, Se, gallium (Ga), and sulfur (S), instead of silicon, for optical absorption.

CIS solar cells are characterized by their capacity to absorb about 100 times more light than silicon-based cells. They can also be made into thin films. The cell thickness of silicon solar cells is about 200 μm, while

(4) Scholarships

1) University-Recommended Scholarships

University-recommended scholarships include scholarships provided by Ritsumeikan University and scholarships from central and local governments, private foundations, and individuals. A list of all scholarships may be found on pages 13-17 under (7) List of Scholarships. The scholarship award amounts and payment periods vary based on the scholarship.

2) Scholarships to which students can apply individually (no university recommendation required)

If the university receives information about scholarships to which students may apply on their own, that information will be shared via manaba+R and e-mail from the International Center, as well as posted on the International Center website. Other scholarships may exist that do not pass information to the university, so please check the scholarship organizations' websites and bulletins on your own.

*If applying for any scholarships on your own, inform the International Center on your campus.

(5) Application Procedures for Tuition Reduction and Scholarships

For more details about the application procedures for tuition reduction and scholarships, please refer to information provided by e-mail, on manaba+R, and on the International Center webpage.
